

Capella University and Mission Critical TV partner to offer training programs for Law Enforcement and Emergency Responders.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

April 27, 2011 Wellington Fl. The challenges facing Law Enforcement and the Emergency responder community continue to evolve as violent attacks and natural disasters test the security of the U.S. The rate at which the security environment is changing makes it difficult for many Public Safety professionals to keep current with new tactics, techniques and technologies. Almost all public safety personnel have a requirement to stay current within their field but many find it difficult to acquire professional development credits.

Capella University and Mission Critical TV have partnered to offer professional education credits to both Law Enforcement and the Emergency Responder community through closed circuit TV broadcast and high quality online learning that is specifically designed to best serve working adult professionals.

“Capella University is a great academic partner for Mission Critical TV. Mission Critical educational content is centered around current information with relevance to the real world environments these men and women work in everyday. Capella University’s faculty are leaders in the field with experience in organizations such as the FBI, New York Police Department, Federal Bureau of Prisons, and U.S. Customs.” said David Holden, Executive Producer for Mission Critical TV. “Mission Critical’s accredited content will now be available to first responders anytime and accessible from just about anywhere through Capella University’s online platform.”

Dr. Charles Tiffin, Dean, Capella University’s School of Public Service Leadership states, “Mission Critical TV is a perfect complement to our educational model which supports educating those in public service who understand the critical importance of collaboration and multidisciplinary leadership.”

Mission Critical TV is a series of sixty minute training programs hosted by John J. Sullivan Jr. Ph.D. Each program will deliver educational content as well as a detailed discussion of the security threats and solutions from the industry’s leading authorities.
